

What Happens When We FOCUS On Tiered Care Coordination?

Research has consistently shown that Wraparound care coordination can help keep youth with the most complex needs “at home, in school, and out of trouble,” while also reducing strain on caregivers, and reducing costs from out of home placements; but what does care coordination look like for families of children and youth with less intensive needs (NWI, 2024)?

Join us for this unique three-part webinar series designed to introduce and deepen your understanding and application of FOCUS, an intermediate care coordination model developed by the Innovations Institute at UConn. Through interactive discussions and practical skill-building, participants enhance their ability to effectively partner with families, coordinate care, and track meaningful outcomes.
